

THE CHARACTERISICS OF PLANTATION MENATLITY AND PLANTATION POLITICS IN EMERGING COMMUNITIES [1, 2]

In a modern sociological or economic context, it describes a community where rigid hierarchical structures are accepted as the natural order. This creates a psychological environment where:

- The Elite view their dominance and the poverty of others as inevitable or earned.
- The Impoverished may adopt a sense of resignation or dependency, internalizing the belief that upward mobility is impossible.
- The Culture prioritizes the preservation of the status quo over systemic reform, often relying on paternalistic relationships rather than equitable growth. [3, 4, 5, 6, 7]

Essentially, the "plantation" moves from a physical location to a social and psychological framework that governs how people interact and view their own potential. [8, 9]
